DECEMBER 2025

Brothers and Sisters in Christ,

Third and fourth century Christians knew of persecution.

A boy named after his uncle was born in the city of Patara, on the southern coast of modern-day Turkey, and he lived to see some of the most amazing historical events in post-Resurrection history. Born to wealthy parents, he was taught by his parents Epiphanius and Johanna about the Christian faith and following the instructions of Jesus. His parents, however, died in an epidemic when he was still very young, so he was obliged to move in with his uncle Nicholas, bishop of Patara. Nicholas taught the young lad, who eventually became a reader and in due course came to be a priest himself.

As this young lad grew into his role as a priest, he took to heart Jesus teaching to 'sell what you own and give the money to the poor.' Indeed, it seems he spent his entire inheritance this way, selling his worldly goods and distributing the money to those in need.

For example, one story tells of a poor man with three young daughters. As these daughters grew older, the father lacked the money to provide a dowry to help attract a good and wealthy husband, and (as was often the case in such situations) slavery for the girls was a distinct and distasteful possibility. On three separate occasions, however, this generous priest is said to have tossed a small bag containing a few gold coins in through an open window, which landed in the girls' shoes that had been left by the fireplace to dry. Needless to say, the girls' lives were changed due to his generous nature.

Things began to change, however, in the year 299. Emperor Diocletian took part in a ceremony designed to reveal to him the future. The ritual involved killing animals and then reading their entrails, but the pagan priests were not able to interpret the signs. The excuse these fortunetellers gave was that there were too many 'impure' people within the Emperor's house. These obstructions to success, as it were, were of course the Christians, and soon Christians everywhere were being purged.

The persecution of Christians continued for the next several years, a fact that would directly impact the generous priest. Diocletian imprisoned and exiled him. It is said that the prisons were so full of Christians that would not renounce their faith that there was no room for other rule breakers, like murderers and thieves.

Diocletian's persecutions did not last forever, though, and soon Emperor Constantine assumed power. The course of Christianity changed in 312 when Constantine himself became a Christian. The generous priest not only outlasted Diocletian's persecution, but saw Christianity become the professed faith of the emperor!

History remembers these three, the two emperors and the priest, but each for different reasons. Diocletian is remembered for his opposition to Christianity, and Constantine for his conversion. But the generous priest, named for his uncle Nicholas, was given a sainthood by the Catholic Church for his outstanding Christian generosity, even during persecution. Saint Nicholas, as he would come to be known as, demonstrated just how much the world can change by doing what Jesus taught. One way we still celebrate his generosity is by hanging stockings by the fireplace to be filled with goodies, an echo of the three daughters' story.

Live as Jesus taught us to, and see what God can do! And have a very Merry Christmas!

Grace and Peace,

Pastor Jamie
